THE STORY

Three years ago, Jeroen Gebbing and Rodi Beukert met, and there's been no turning back since. Jeroen had just learned to DJ, together with his daughter. She chose a different path, but he was hooked and had found his new passion. When he saw Rodi playing at a festival, he decided to take a chance. He'd never played for a crowd before, but talked his way in anyway. That night they played together for the first time, and the musical connection was instant.

From that moment on they talked every day, sometimes more than with their own girlfriends, and the bromance grew into a DJ duo: Bellaka Systema. The name comes from Spanish street slang rooted in reggaeton culture, meaning something like sexy, hot, flirtatious. Exactly the energy they bring to the dancefloor with their mix of Latin Grooves, House and Disco.

What sets Bellaka Systema apart is that they go just as hard as the crowd. No two guys standing stoically behind the decks, but two guys dancing, waving and swinging like they're the ones in the front row.

Off stage, they're two down-to-earth guys from Twente, direct, no nonsense, with dry humor mostly aimed at each other. But put them behind the decks, and that down-to-earth attitude flips into pure surrender.

That energy is contagious, every single time. Their motto says it all: Let's shake some ass. And that's exactly what happens the moment they take the decks.
